

Discussions: Is Abandoning Ship the Only Resort in Times of Tragedy?

Please find below Capt. Bikram Singh article from Marine Inside site:

Consider a ship getting stranded in bad weather due to which she finds herself struggling to stay afloat. In such circumstances what are the chances that her crew would fight against the odds and survive a tragedy? Would they simply abandon her leaving her high and dry or if given a choice, will they stay aboard the ship considering it to be as a much safer course of action to call for help and getting it too?

Abandoning a ship may seem to be the most practical option out there to survive a catastrophe, but as challenging as it may seem, it might not be the last alternative.

Master's Responsibility: Abandoning Ship in Tragedy

Autors Aleksandrs Tregubovs
Trešdiena, 20 februāris 2013 03:06

in a state of emergency, the master must ensure the safety of the ship and its crew until the point where

Master's Responsibility: Abandoning Ship in Tragedy

Autors Aleksandrs Tregubovs
Trešdiena, 20 februāris 2013 03:06

